ABOUT

I am Vibhor Mathur, born in Jaipur, India, on May 29th, 1992. Currently residing in Jaipur, I'm an advertising designer by the day, and I pursue my artistic career post-work hours and on weekends.

As a self-taught practice, I observe and interpret commonly found objects as an outlet to express my emotions and feelings. It is a reflection of an introverted, self-conscious, and overthinking mind. Fascinated by the symbolic power of everyday objects, I investigate their ability to evoke sentiments and fears. I also express through quirky one-liners, which revolve around my thoughts and reactions towards day-to-day things.

POWER

Project Power is all about expressing myself through everyday electrical accessories. The intrigue of finding meaning in random objects has become a driver for this project. In this exploration, I adopt assemblage and typography as my creative output, using various electrical equipment like sockets, switches, wires, boards, etc. Assembled objects create compositions that speak an emotional message while having a visual appeal of their own. I use the physical meaning associated with these objects, like transfer of electrical power, power source, power consumption, etc., as a metaphor for inner power like courage, inspiration, instinct. I also add texts in my work wherever it is needed because words sometimes add clarity and enhance the message of the composition. I record these compositions in photographs and videos to capture the experience of the artwork. Images/videos are shot on iPhone 12, produced on Adobe Photoshop and Adobe Premiere, and rendered for print and digital viewing.
